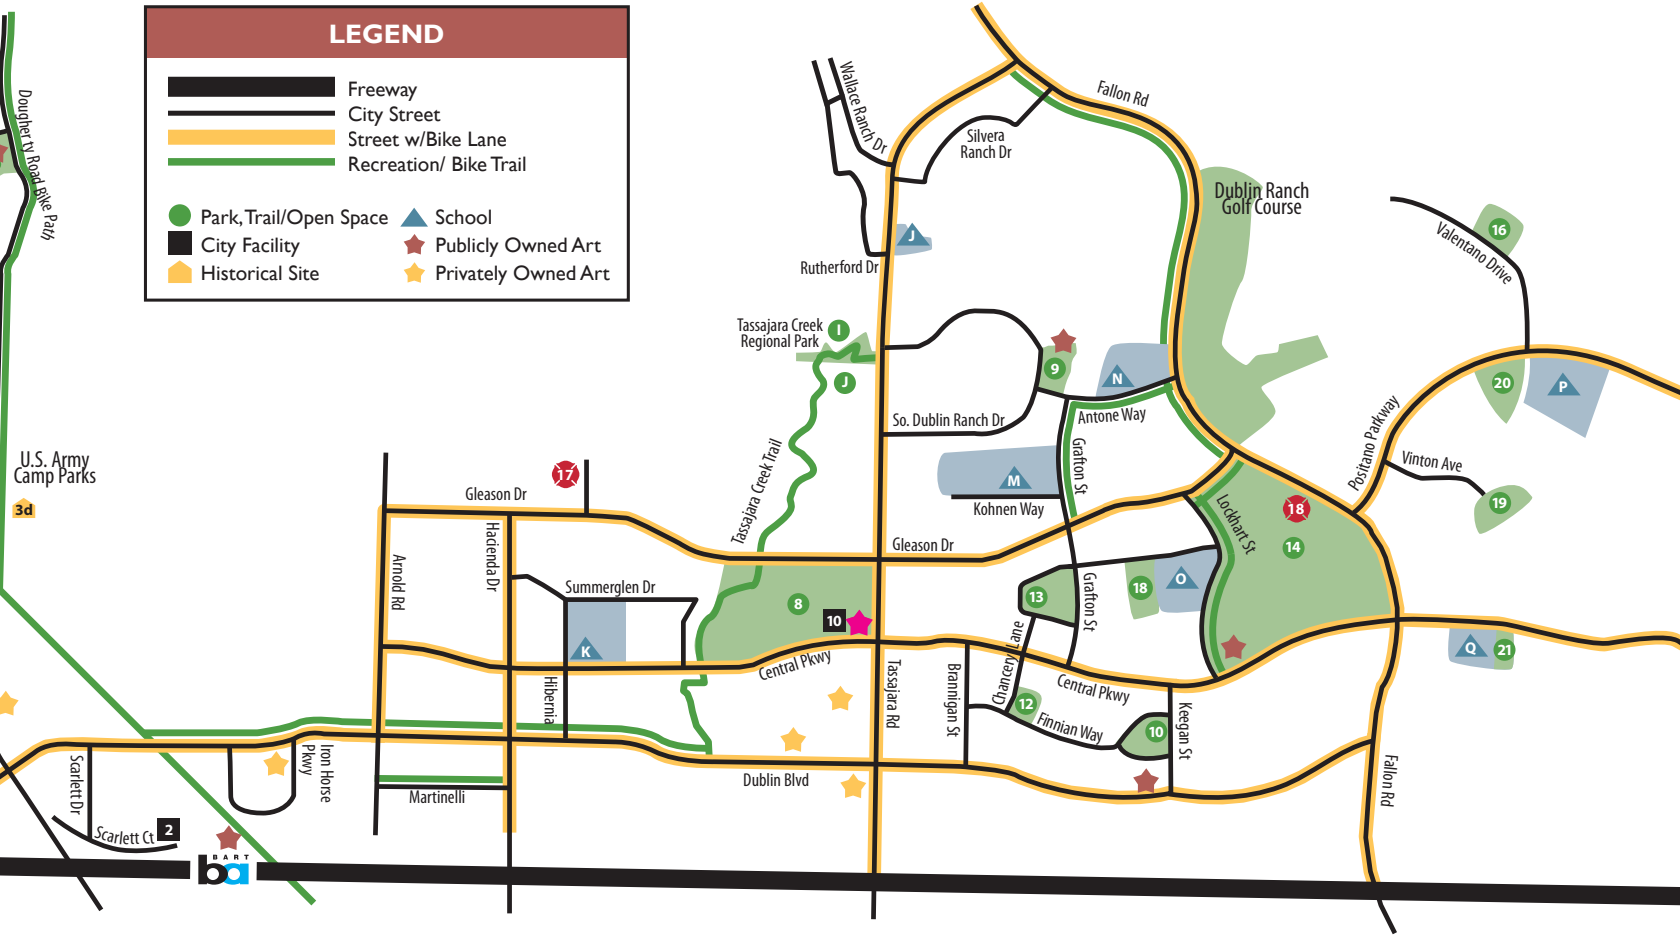
PUBLIC ART: IT'S LIKE HAVING A GALLERY, RIGHT IN YOUR OWN BACKYARD

One of the things that makes Dublin special is our great collection of public art. The City owns and maintains more than 30 art pieces on City property for the public's enjoyment. Dublin's Public Art Ordinance calls for large private developers to set aside up to a half percentage of the project's construction value to install public art on their properties, or support the City's Public Art Fund.

Look for this public artwork next time you are out and about in Dublin:

★ THANK YOU, WATER, TODJI KURTZMAN, 2017


This multi-part bronze sculpture depicts the Spirit of Alamilla Spring casting a stone across time. Each bronze splash represents a different era in Dublin's history. They are embossed with cymatic sound wave patterns created by vibrating voices in water taken from Alamilla Spring, a natural source of fresh water that drew travelers and encouraged the first settlers to make homes here. Artist Todji Kurtzman lives in Portland, Oregon. His public art sculptures can be seen throughout the Americas and as far away as Thailand. Kurtzman got his start sculpting figures for animated films.
