

Sisyphus, Roger Berry, 1983

This crown-like sculpture by Roger Berry is located in front of Dublin's Civic Center. It is created by a series of zig zag cut panels of steel, welded together, and attached at two points to the ground. According to Berry,

"The shadows of the front tips graze the back tips in the winter. The shadows of the back tips graze the front tips in the summer. In the spring and fall the shadows are contained by the piece." Berry, a California native, has been creating monumental sculpture since 1980. His sculpture is in private, corporate, and museum collections throughout the country.

Major pieces include DARWIN at the Oliver Ranch in Geyserville, PERSPECTIVE at Cali Mill Plaza, Cupertino and CYCLE at Kaiser Hospital, San Francisco.
